The 28th EORTC-NCI-AACR Symposium on 'Molecular Targets and Cancer Therapeutics' is the premier international meeting on drug development, innovative approaches, targeted agents including biomarkers and translational research. This annual meeting takes place alternatingly in the USA and in Europe (since 1978).

The symposium brings together academics, scientists and representatives from the pharmaceutical industry to discuss and exchange ideas to foster innovations in drug and cancer therapeutic development, with a particular focus on early clinical application. During the last few years, numerous innovative agents have been discovered as a result of tremendous developments in the understanding of the molecular basis of cancer.

Further clinical progress in cancer treatment will be accomplished mainly through the conduct of translational research projects, efficient new drug development and the execution of innovative early clinical trial designs. This requires a joint and global approach and early and optimal exchange of information. Therefore, the Symposium will ensure the maximum amount of interaction and discussion through an exciting range of plenary sessions and lively workshops.
